Series Editors' Note on Saffron Korean Linguistics Series

ISSN 1740 2956

Series Editors: Jaehoon Yeon, Jae Jung Song

Saffron Korean Linguistics Series, published by Eastern Art Publishing in conjunction with the Centre of Korean Studies, SOAS, University of London, is devoted particularly to functionally and/or typologically orientated research on Korean language and linguistics.

Volumes in the series, while dealing with specific topics in Korean language and linguistics, will address broadly defined functional and/or typological issues and concerns, rather than matters of abstract theoretical polemics. Theoretical or applied work related to Korean language will also be considered. The series aims to offer an international academic forum for the dissemination of the latest research into Korean linguistics as well as Korean language studies.

We welcome manuscripts on any aspect of Korean linguistics and language study, including Phonetics, Phonology, Morphology, Syntax, Semantics, Pragmatics, Typology, Discourse Analysis, Sociolinguistics, Language Acquisition, Historical Linguistics, and Korean Language Teaching. Submission enquiries should initially be addressed to Jaehoon Yeon. Manuscripts or abstracts for book proposals must be submitted simultaneously to both the Series Editors. Contributors whose native language is not English are strongly advised to have their manuscripts read, and revised where warranted, by native speakers.

About the Series Editors

Dr Jaehoon Yeon is Senior Lecturer in Korean language at the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS), University of London. Dr Yeon received his BA and MA in Linguistics at the Seoul National University and his PhD in Linguistics at SOAS. He is the author of Korean Grammatical Constructions: Their Form and Meaning (volume 1 in Saffron Korean Linguistics Series), editor of Studies in Korean Morpho-Syntax, the second volume in the series, and co-author of Teach Yourself Korean, Elementary Korean, Continuing Korean, and Integrated Korean: Advanced 1 and 2. He has also published numerous articles on Korean grammar and linguistics.

Dr Jae Jung Song is Associate Professor of Linguistics at the University of Otago, New Zealand. He is the author of Causatives and Causation: A Universal-Typological Perspective (Addison Wesley Longman, 1996), Linguistic Typology: Morphology and Syntax (Pearson, 2001), and The Korean Language: Structure, Use and Context (Routledge 2005). He is also the co-editor, with Anna Siewierska, of Case, Typology and Grammar (John Benjamins, 1998).

Korean Grammatical Constructions: Their Form and Meaning

ISBN 1 872843 263 PB

This is the inaugural volume in the Saffron Korean Linguistics Series. The objective of this book is to describe and to give functional-typological explanations to various grammatical constructions in Korean. The grammatical constructions examined here comprise double-nominative, dative-subject, causative, passive, anti-causative, possessor-ascension constructions and locative-alternation, in which the grammatical relation of arguments changes. The book is also concerned with the mapping relations between semantic roles, grammatical relations and case-marking in the constructions.

As the author points out, in human languages, contrary to the formal languages of mathematics, logic and computers, there are alternative ways of encoding propositional expressions in grammatical relations. The alternations in the grammatical encoding of propositional expressions have been attributed to the existence of a set of 'grammatical relation (GR) changing processes' such as passive, causative, anti-causative, and applicative. GR changing processes disrupt the relationship between the surface manifestation of grammatical relations, which are often marked by case-marker, and the semantic role of a given argument.

Studies in Korean Morpho-Syntax: A Functional-Typological Perspective

Edited by Jaehoon Yeon
SOAS, University of London

ISBN 1 872843 38 7 HB
ISBN 1 872843 39 5 PB

This volume contains eight papers that are all dedicated to issues in Korean morpho-syntax from a functional-typological perspective. The contributing authors include Kaoru Horie, Namkil Kim, Stefan Knoob, Sang Hwan Seong, Jae Jung Song, Jae-Mog Song, Nam Sun Song and Jaehoon Yeon. The authors analyse Korean data from a cross-linguistic perspective, showing how cross-linguistic generalisations can contribute to an understanding of the structures in individual languages. Cross-linguistic generalisations are significant in understanding individual languages and in gaining insight into the nature of human language. Studies in individual languages and universal grammar should complement each other. The grammar of an individual language serves as direct evidence that provides the basis for universal grammar. Cross-linguistic generalisations make it possible for us to gain insight into the nature of language in general and, in turn, help us discover facts about particular languages.

The authors explore various issues on morpho-syntactic phenomena through a cross-linguistic comparison between not only Korean and Japanese, but also Germanic or other languages. The cross-linguistic comparison appeals to semantic and pragmatic considerations. Since these semantic and pragmatic functions are the basis of comparison, it is inevitable that they play a role in cross-linguistic generalisation.

Frontiers of Korean Language Acquisition

Edited by Jae Jung Song
University of Otago, New Zealand

ISBN 1 872843 61 1 HB
ISBN 1 872843 62 X PB

This collection brings together original contributions from leading scholars in the field of Korean language acquisition research. Six of the eight articles in the book address various aspects of the L1 or L2 acquisition of Korean, with the remaining two dealing with Korean speakers' L2 acquisition of English or providing a general discussion of L1/L2 acquisition in the context of linguistic typology. Frontiers of Korean Language Acquisition represents these scholars' concerted effort to bring some of the pioneering work in Korean language acquisition to the wider international scholarly community. The collection will be of great interest to researchers in Korean language acquisition in particular and language acquisition in general. In addition, advanced students of first or second language acquisition, psycholinguistics, bilingualism, language and cognition, and general Korean linguistics will also find articles of interest in the collection.
